Maine Publicity Bureau News

(From Maine Publicity Bureau)
An average of 800 persons daily visited the exhibit car of Maine products on the Good Will tour of 23 states made by Maine officials and business men and women of the State. Half of the car was devoted to various industries and in charge of Benjamin F. Cleaves, Executive Secretary of the Associated Industries of the State.

The other half of the car contained exhibits of potatoes, native vegetables and fruits, and was prepared by the State Department of Agriculture, being in charge of Carlton Miles of the Maine Publicity Bureau, who represented the Maine Development Commission on the trip.

In every city visited, crowds of former Maine residents were waiting for the arrival of the Better Business Special and through the car, eager to meet old friends and to secure recreational literature on Maine. Many of them had been away from the State from thirty to forty years but their loyalty to Maine had not diminished.

Fifteen-pound sacks of Aroostook potatoes were presented to the Governors of Kansas, Oklahoma, Texas, Florida and South Carolina and to the presidents and officials of the Chambers of Commerce in every city visited.

President Hoover received the visitors on the lawn of the White House at Washington and accepted a gift of a can of Maine blueberries.

The tour, which took fourteen days, included visits to Niagara Falls, Chicago, Kansas City, Topeka, Wichita and Dallas, Texas; St. Louis, Jacksonville, Houston, Texas; New Orleans, Jacksonville, Fla.; Columbia, S. C., and Washington, D. C.

All of the members of the party are enthusiastic over the results of the trip, industrial and agricultural products have been aroused than before and that the tour also will result in an increased tourist business this coming summer, thousands of Maine having been distributed.

In each of the cities visited, were the guests of the Chamber of Commerce, these entertainments having been arranged in advance by A. L. T. Cummings, Secretary of the State Chamber of Commerce, who acted as the leader of the party and as chairman at the banquets.

In each city sightseeing tours had been planned and among the unusual features of the trip were a Mexican dinner served in San Antonio and a fish fry on the banks of Lake Murray, the largest artificial lake in the world, near Columbia, S. C.

National advertising on Maine is starting to appear in the magazines for March and, as a result, inquiries in unusual numbers for this time of the year are coming to the Maine Publicity Bureau.

If everything goes well the State should have its largest tourist business this coming summer.

An interesting article on the Black House at Ellsworth, the famous mansion built in 1802 by General David Cobb, of George Washington's staff, and prelate of his daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. John Black, recently appeared in the Christian Science Monitor.

Great interest during the trip of the Better Business Special was displayed by the residents of Texas and Oklahoma in the cans of blueberries on display. The fruit is unknown in the southwest and much propaganda work was done in extolling the merits of blueberry pie.

TOURIST YEAR EXPECTED TO BREAK RECORDS
Although June is the month when tourists start coming to Maine in large numbers, the amount of mail now being received by the Maine Publicity Bureau warrants the prediction that the coming summer will see more visitors in the State than before. As a direct result of the initial national advertising of the State, two weeks in February brought 423 letters to the Bureau as against 220 during the same period in 1931. It has been interesting to discover that a larger proportion of the inquiries than previously have come from the southwest, indicating an immediate result from the missionary work done by members of the Better Business Special that recently visited 23 states.

"We are pushing our campaign to have the towns of Maine adopt a standard marker to be placed in the center of towns that the visitor may know what place he is stopping in or passing through," says Herbert L. Stone, President of the Maine Publicity Bureau.

"This is a valuable advertisement and if residents of the various communities will only consider the value of the recreational business benefits every class of person and helps to solve the unemployment problem during the summer months, we shall have a good cooperation in this work."

There is no reason why the "dude ranch" should not prove as popular in Maine as it has in other states.

Traffic over the whole length of the new Wisconsin-Ellsworth bridge is expected to be opened sometime in March.

"Dude" ranches hitherto have been confined to the west, but the idea is being introduced into New England and Leon J. Beck, noted horse lover and rider, is planning to establish such a ranch, having purchased a farm on Long Lake, near Harrison, Arizona, cowboys will care for a string of western broncos in addition to thoroughbred saddle horses.

There is no reason why the "dude ranch" should not prove as popular in Maine as it has in other states.

BAXTER'S BITTERS NOW IN TABLETS

Some sort of bitters is usually found in every family medicine chest because bitters have long been rightfully recognized as the most effective and safe remedy for constipation, biliousness and dyspepsia. Usually this is taken in liquid form.

But now, the makers of Dr. Baxter's famous mandrake Bitters have perfected a harmless, yet effective, tablet form of bitters which retains the full strength and effectiveness of the liquid Baxters.

If your stomach feels like turning over and your bowels are sluggish or inactive, get a box of Baxter's Bitters tablets today. Their tonic properties will astonish you. And they are only 30 cents a box.

I'd Rather Read Poetry

BY HENRY DAVIS NADIG

DIURNAL PRELUDE

How many million millions miles
Have the golden spears of the sun slipped To dapple the lawn with dappled light
And the old stone chimneys
With blue leaf shadows
Or pattern richly the lawn
With blue and pools of mist and hazy light Spangles to the farthest back of the road Sky-scrapers of the garden Flaunt a majestic silver cascade and pageant Of marching splendor across the cool yard slope
In northern hills professional of quietude
Before the dawn of a gorgeous day!

Voices
Bob White's sweet note richly repeats the patient pines
The hoarse rattle across the tawny field
Of fresh stillness across the tawny field
From the pond rushes.
Across the luscious blue of a new sky
The insect airplane crosses—
Deep down in the blue of the upper air—
And is swiftly gone.

Invitation
Load up your wagons you movers, marchers Fill up your caravans with rich and gay seekers, strivers, searchers.
Get a job of this glorious day, geters, plenty where it comes from.
Get a rich, deep load for a day's march ahead
Till the annual of glory
Dip up a bucket of beauty for another day.

A Pondering Poet
If I saw Sret is the poet of the Northwest, the back woods and the Indian, Glenn Ward Dresbach is the poet of the Southwest, the desert and the far-west mountains. It is in his colorful words paintings of desert his enchantment with a mess and his wonder at the mountains that we really get the essence of the poet's communication. But Dresbach's most recent volume, "Selected Poems" Henry Holt & Company, composed of poems chosen from his former books of poetry including "The Enchanted Mesa" and some newer poems, ranges from short lyrics of desert and ranch of the Southwest to a long poem of the old and famous of New England from sonnets on mountains to poems of sea and jungle.

One does not experience in reading Dresbach's poems any emotional awakening, nor is one conscious of depth of feeling. There is a sober poise in most of the poems, a wonder and awe as the poet contemplates, without too much spontaneity, the mountains and canyons, the brook and desert. Yet there is a quick beauty in his delicate descriptions, in his careful observations. There seems also to be for the poet the fascination of the sea, which however reaches no vigorous passion. What a story lies hidden in "The Story of a House." What drama what tragedy! Yet I would not say that it is not well told; it merely lacks power; it has not what I should like to call (if I may phrase it) "zip." The word "zip" seems to be evidenced a great deal by the poet and might well be taken as a key word for his poetry. But it certainly is not a bad idea to ponder! Would that some ponderer more critical than I look through my copy of the book that I have checked the sonnet "When We Have Pondered," "City Canyons," "Approach to Cedars," "The Enchanted Mesa," "The Water FINDER," which reminds me just a bit of Robert Frost (only Frost would have left off the last line), "Mountain Sonnets," "In Western Mountains" and the introductory sonnet, which I think will stand quoting.

The Little Ships That Never Sail
At work on inland farms he must have In restless year of sailing ships that came With lifted prows where still the wonder gleamed
From seas and ports he loved but could not dream
In him was some old trace of blood that knew
The lift of sails and the thrill of the sea
But land had held him and the harvest grew
And he had never dared to go away.
Too old at last for work, his knotted hands
Have turned to dreams his youth saw shining
And at a window facing prairie lands
He sees the cloud-ships billowed down the sky.
Each day he sits there till the light must fail.
To build his picture of that never sail.

An Invaluable Anthology
No careful student of American Poetry can afford to be without a copy of Louis Untermeyer's new critical anthology, "American Poetry—From the Beginning to Whitman" (Harcourt, Brace & Company). Whether or not one entirely agrees with Mr. Untermeyer's critical essays which precede the selections of poetry and whether or not one holds the questions the editor's judgment, it must be granted that Mr. Untermeyer, who holds a leading place among our anthologists has given the most comprehensive and complete presentation of our poetry throughout Walt Whitman yet produced.

The book, some 800 pages, is in itself a condensation of countless biographical and historical facts, an epitome of the whole basic trend in American poetry, a commentary invaluable in its terse criticism. More than that, Mr. Untermeyer, who holds a leading place among our anthologists has given the most comprehensive
and complete presentation of our poetry
throughout Walt Whitman yet produced.

Mr. Untermeyer has devoted about 100 pages to Native Ballads and Folk-Songs.
This section includes American Indian Poetry, Spanish Colonial Verse, Early American Ballads, Negro Spirituals, Negro Social, "Blues" and Work Songs, Negroid Melodies, Cowboy Songs and Hobo Harmonies, Backwoods Ballads and Gutturals. In these the reader will find many of the old ballads and songs from songs from Old Folks at Home to Casey Jones. A very complete bibliography and an index of first lines concludes the volume. What more could the student and lover of American Poetry wish?
